An Urban Oasis: The Orange County Agricultural and Nikkei Heritage Museum at the Fullerton Arboretum
Spotlighting the rich agricultural legacy of Orange County and the Japanese American community's contributions to that chronicle.

Sowing Dreams, Cultivating Lives: Nikkei Farmers in Pre-World War II Orange County.

Opens February 10, 2007.

The Orange County Agricultural and Nikkei Heritage Museum has been built on the grounds of the Fullerton Arboretum and has been designed along the lines of a packing house. California State University, Fullerton, and the Fullerton Arboretum are working together to open the museum to the public. The inside of the building is divided into four sections: Nikkei, Pioneer, Educational, and Transportation and Geography. There is a small bookstore and the Potting Shed will move its plant sales adjacent to the bookstore alcove. The museum will highlight the history, development, and impact of agriculture, as well as the contributions of the Japanese American community and the local pioneer families, to the growth of Orange County. This introductory exhibit will be a peek into upcoming planned exhibitions and will be open throughout the summer.

The first major exhibit will focus on the Nikkei. Sowing Dreams, Cultivating Lives: Nikkei Farmers in Pre-World War II Orange County will journey with the early Japanese immigrants to California, and follow their stories as they establish permanent communities in Orange County by marrying, raising families, founding schools and social groups, and above all, cultivating the land.

Rank and Style : Power Dressing in Imperial China

For generations China's rulers wore emblems on their robes that identified their place in a complex system of rank and privilege. This exhibition explores how this imperial hierarchy was maintained through the bestowing and wearing of exquisitely woven and embroidered 'rank badges,' as they have become known in the West.

Identity and status, so carefully crafted and preserved among China's elite, were expressed primarily through garments and their decoration, making them virtually a second skin – so intimately connected to one's person that even in death wearing the appropriate badge assured a continuation of earthly status. The exhibition is rich in a wide variety of rank and festival badges worn by the emperor, members of the imperial household, and civil and military officials.

Rank and Style: Power Dressing in Imperial China presents for the first time in the United States selections from the Chris Hall Collection of Hong Kong. These rare and exquisite rank badges date from 1500 to the mid-19th century, with many from the Ming Dynasty (1368–1644). Numerous badges feature woven or embroidered mythical creatures such as the dragon and phoenix, while others depict rabbits, cranes and tigers. Additional pieces in the exhibition are drawn from the collections of the Pacific Asia Museum and local collections.

Dale Gluckman, Guest Curator

This exhibition will be part of the fourth city-wide collaboration of Pasadena's cultural institutions, "Art and Ideas."

Runs September 20 - October 14, 2007 DURANGO

By Julia Cho

Directed by Chay Yew

When Boo-Seng Lee is laid off from the job to which he has devoted the last 25 years of his life, he decides to take his two sons Jimmy and Isaac on a road trip to Durango, Colorado. As they make their way across the Arizona desert, they confront family secrets, peeling back the layers of identity, alienation and duty that define being Asian in America. DURANGO promises to be a thought-provoking examination of the fears, fantasies, and failures of a family standing in the shadow of the American Dream.

October 25, 2007 Zatoichi

A showing of 'Zatoichi' (aka 'The Blind Swordsman') directed by Takeshi Kitano

Zatoichi (aka The Blind Swordsman)_directed by "Beat" Takeshi Kitano_Japan, 2003_116 minutes, 35mm

The Crank presents Zatoichi, Takeshi Kitano's acclaimed updating of the legendary hero from 1960s and 70s Japanese cinema. Kitano plays the title character, a blind masseur who defends a village against a ruthless gang of killers. The film is, ultimately, more than a samurai film, but an exploration of the "Beat" Takeshi persona developed in such films as Fireworks (Hana-bi), Kikujuro, and other modern classics, a persona that crosses genres as disparate as comedy, the gangster film, and the musical. ___ "...film that seems alive in the sense that it appears to have free will." -- Roger Ebert, Chicago Sun-Times__The Crank is a film club run by the graduate students of UCLA's Department of Film, Television, and Digital Media. Its mission is to program film series which showcase the treasures of the UCLA Film and Television Archive. The Fall 2007 quarter highlights some of the best in contemporary international art house cinema.

November 02, 2007 Spiritual Sounds of Central Asia

Central Asia concert presented by UCLA LIVE

Some of the world's most ancient and mysterious music and epic poetry comes to Royce Hall in a remarkable concert featuring 18 of Central Asia's greatest singers and musicians, many of them appearing in the U.S. for the first time. Performed against a backdrop of vibrant projected images, "Spiritual Sounds of Central Asia" includes artists from the volatile, mountain-ringed region of Asia bordered by Russia, Iran, China and Pakistan including Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Karakalpakstan (Uzbekistan) and Kalmykia. Closed to the West for 70 years, this former Soviet controlled area has experienced a resurgence in ancient musical traditions since the fall of the Soviet Empire. Showcasing some of the most exotic musical traditions on the planet, the concert includes the legendary mugham singer Alim Qasimov and his virtuosic four-man ensemble, trance-inducing mystical songs by the seven-person Badakhshan Ensemble, and an illustration of Central Asian musical styles by the once taboo, all-female ensemble Bardic Divas. With supertitles for texted songs.

November 03, 2007 Forty-eight Buddhas of Measureless Life: Court Eunuch Patronage at the Sculpture Grottoes of Longmen

Amy McNair presents the Twentieth Sammy Yukuan Lee Lecture in Chinese Archaeology & Art

The centerpiece of the sculpted cave-shrines at Longmen is the colossal Vairocana assembly sponsored by Emperor Gaozong and Empress Wu during the Tang dynasty (618-907). Fifty years after its completion, however, a consortium of court eunuchs added a display of forty-eight Buddha figures to its walls. This intrusive project allows us to explore questions about the spiritual and social purposes of Buddhist statuary and patronage in medieval China.

Amy McNair is the author of Donors of Longmen: Faith, Politics, and Patronage in Medieval Chinese Buddhist Sculpture, published in 2007 by the University of Hawaii Press. She is Associate Professor of Chinese Art at the University of Kansas, where she teaches and researches early and medieval Chinese art.

“Fudeko Sono Ai Tenshi no Piano” (Fudeko - The Angel's Piano) 2006

Directed by Hisako Yamada Starring Takako Tokiwa, Emiya Ichikawa In Japanese with English subtitles
“Fudeko” is the inspiring true story of Fudeko Ishii; a pioneer who established education, care and social services for developmentally disabled children in Japan in the Meiji era. Popular Japanese actress Takako Tokiwa portrays Fudeko’s very dramatic life and Kabuki actor Emiya Ichikawa makes his film debut. Adding to the authenticity of the film mentally disabled children have been cast in the film. The director, Hisako Yamada has dedicated her career to producing movies introducing unknown historical figures of significant achievement to a wide audience.

December 01, 2007 Comparative Perspectives on Rhetorical Narratives

A day-long conference presented in conjunction with the Southern California China Colloquium

Oganizer: Professor Lisa Raphals (University of California, Riverside)

A great deal of scholarship in recent years has focused on the rhetorical dimensions of historical, philosophical and religious narratives. That scholarship tends to be embedded in one discipline or one genre. A particularly interesting example is the problem of women's biography, which tends to be considered in isolation from other comparable rhetorical narratives. The papers in this panel attempt to open new ground, each examining a rhetorical narrative context through a comparative perspective, with significant attention to how and whether rhetorical narratives can be approached comparatively by genre, by area, or by time period. One session will focus on hagiographies and other biographical narratives. The other will address other comparative asepts of rhetoric.

Chinese American Museum, El Pueblo de Los Angeles, www.camla.org

Jake Lee exhibit opens.

THE CHINESE AMERICAN MUSEUM AND AUTO CLUB GIVE LEGENDARY CALIFORNIA PAINTER DAY IN SUNSHINE

California Artist Fused Chinese Heritage with California Scenes

(LOS ANGELES, Oct. 31, 2007) — Jake Lee, a highly respected, yet quiet and enigmatic painter who influenced numerous other artists in California for decades, has not been the subject of a major retrospective, until now. "Sunshine & Shadow: In Search of Jake Lee" an exhibition hosted by the Chinese American Museum of Los Angeles, co-produced with the Automobile Club of Southern California, marks the first comprehensive and critical review of a prolific artist who embraced California landscapes and city scenes through watercolor.

Showcasing at the Chinese American Museum (CAM) from Dec. 1 to April 13, 2008, "Sunshine & Shadow" will highlight more than 60 watercolors, including eight from the Auto Club's WESTWAYS cover art collection. The collection will also illustrate with photos and letters more details of the artist's professional career and his family life, which he kept distinctly separate for many years. "Jake Lee is among the most well known and prolific watercolor artists of the 20th Century, yet we found very little published about his personal life as we researched this exhibition," said Dr. Pauline Wong, Executive Director of the museum. "We had no problem locating his art and his influence – it lives in collections throughout the state and in the hearts of his many students. But it was more challenging to find the man. We believe this exhibition and catalogue will result in new appreciation for his artistic production and his influence."

, October 20, 2007 Masterpiece of Buddhist Art: The Works of Korean Living Treasure Master Jin Hyung Lee Silk Roads Gallery and Korea Sah International Temple of Los Angeles are hosting Masterpieces of Buddhist Art: The Works of Korean Living Treasure Master Jin Hyung Lee.

Silk Roads Gallery, along with the Korea Sah International Temple is hosting an exhibit of the works of Master Jin Hyung Lee, a Korean National Treasure from October 20th to December 16 at Silks Roads
Design Gallery on La Brea Avenue. It is the first time Master Lee's works will be exhibited outside of Asia.

Entitled Masterpiece of Buddhist Art: The Works of Korean Living Treasure Master Jin Hyung Lee, the exhibit will feature over 30 bronze and wood statues gilded in 24 carat gold of Buddhas, Bodhisattvas and monks, as well as ritual implements, including a life size seated triad of Shakyamuni Buddha flanked by Manjushri and Samantabhadra. All the work in the exhibition will be available for purchase.

Master Jin Hyung Lee's works are in over 60 Buddhist Temples throughout Korea, including the Song
Kwong Sah (one of the 'Three Jewels' of Korean Buddhist Temples and a National Treasure) and Beob Ryun Sah." The Korea Sah International Temple in Koreatown, Los Angeles has a remarkable collection of Master Lee's work including an unusual relief of 'The Thousand Buddhas' behind the main altar.

Silk Roads encourages educational or other interested groups to contact them to set up individual tours and lectures on Master Lee's work and Korean Buddhist Art in the Gallery and at the Korea Sah International Buddhist Temple during the exhibition dates.

There will be a Gala Opening and Artist Reception held on October 20th at 7pm at Silk Roads Design Gallery, located at 145 North La Brea Avenue in Los Angeles. Master Lee will be in attendance and there will be performances by two groups of Korean singers – who are also nationally recognized by the Korean Government as 'Intangible Cultural Assets'.

New Chinese Cinema: The Unofficial Stories of Tang Tang, Piggy, Little Moth, & Others

Screenings -- this year including films from Hong Kong and Taiwan -- from October 5 to October 26

For this latest edition of the UCLA Film & Television Archive's New Chinese Cinema series, we are pleased to welcome the California Institute of the Arts (CalArts) as a partner and to expand the biennial series into a cross-town venture: with Archive screenings at the Billy Wilder Theater and CalArts screenings at the Roy and Edna Disney/CalArts Theater.

The programmatic geography has changed as well—from an exclusive focus on Mainland China to a selection that encompasses Hong Kong and Taiwan, both of whose cinemas the Archive has also presented in years past but in discrete film series. By changing from a territorial framework of “national cinema” to a pan-Chinese, regional one, we recognize not only the transnational movement and exchange of people, capital, ideas and commodities that has been a defining economic and social verity of the formerly “three,” now “two Chinas” for over 20 years (indeed ever since the Deng Xiaoping-orchestrated “opening” of Mainland China to capitalist development in 1978), but also the cultural and historical ties that bind across the divides of Chinese polity.

*NOTE: Please visit <www.redcat.org> for information about additional New Chinese Cinema film titles screening at REDCAT.

Oct 6-28 Award-winning New Asian American Play At Electric Lodge Timescape Arts Group, with the support of the Japanese American National Museum, presents the world premiere of INNOCENT WHEN YOU DREAM, winner of the 2006 Pacific Rim Playwrights Award, in October at Electric Lodge in Venice. Ken Narasaki, who also co-wrote the critically acclaimed and popular THE MIKADO PROJECT, has written a new drama about a Japanese American war veteran who finds himself returning to a lost memory, while his third-generation children struggle to interpret his wishes and unravel his past. The play flips back and forth between two time periods until past and present finally come together in an instant. Actor and activist

George Takei called this play, “One of the most moving things I’ve ever seen. I hope it finds the broadest possible audience. It’s funny, it’s sad, it’s important, it’s beautiful. I’m passionately in love with this play.” Directed by Alberto Isaac, the play stars Sab Shimono, Emily Kuroda, Sharon Omi, John Miyasaki, Mike Hagiwara, and Ken Narasaki. Set Design: Mina Kimukawa Sound: Dennis Yen. Lights: Chris Singleton. Costume: Ken Takemoto. Videographer: John Flynn. Photographer: Emily Kuroda. Stage Manager: Darlene Miyakawa. The play runs from October 6 through October 28, 2007, Fridays and Saturdays at 8pm, with Saturday and Sunday matinees at 3pm, at Electric Lodge, 1416 Electric Avenue (one block east of Abbot Kinney). Directions to the theatre can be found at: www.electriclodge.org. There’s free onsite parking, and the solar-powered theatre is handicapped accessible. Tickets will be $20 at the door, or they can be purchased at: www.brownpapertickets.com, or by calling 1-800-838-3006. For more information about group sales, call Sharon Omi at: 310-592-1160. From the Santa Monica 10 Freeway: Exit Lincoln Blvd. & travel South about 3 miles to Venice Blvd. Turn right on Venice Blvd. Then right on Abbot Kinney. Then right on California Avenue and An immediate right on Electric Ave. The Electric Lodge is the second building on your left. Turn left into our FREE parking lot, and welcome to the Electric Lodge!

Last weekend (or so) I went to:

Visited the Pacific Asia Museum and took a quick look at the impressive exhibition on Chinese court dress and rank insignia:

Rank & Style: Power Dressing in Imperial China

An exhibit at the Pacific Asia Museum through January 27, 2008

“In the past Chinese silk was so valuable that the Roman Empire was nearly bankrupted by the cost of importing it, while Columbus discovered America by accident in his attempt to sail to China and buy Chinese silk at source. Unfortunately silk is fragile so very little has survived to show what our ancestors spent so much time and gold to acquire. It therefore gives me pleasure to show some of the few Ming badges that are still in good condition and enable people to appreciate the achievements of Chinese textile artists of the past.” – Chris Hall

For generations China’s rulers wore emblems on their robes that identified their place in a complex system of rank and privilege. This exhibition explores how this imperial hierarchy was maintained through the bestowing and wearing of exquisitely woven and embroidered ‘rank badges,’ as they have become known in the West. Identity and status, so carefully crafted and preserved among China’s elite, were expressed primarily through garments and their decoration, making them virtually a second skin – so intimately connected to one’s person that even in death wearing the appropriate badge assured a continuation of earthly status. The exhibition is rich in a wide variety of rank and festival badges worn by the emperor, members of the imperial household, and civil and military officials.

Rank and Style: Power Dressing in Imperial China presents for the first time in the United States selections from the Chris Hall Collection of Hong Kong. These rare and exquisite rank badges date from 1500 to the mid-19th century, with many from the Ming Dynasty (1368–1644). Numerous badges feature woven or embroidered mythical creatures such as the dragon and phoenix, while others depict rabbits, cranes and tigers. Additional pieces in the exhibition are drawn from the collections of the Pacific Asia Museum and local collections.
